New Course Proposal
CMN 3220, Rhetoric of Race

1. Catalogue Description
   a. Course Number: CMN 3220
   b. Course Title: Rhetoric of Race
   c. Credit: (3-0-3)
   d. Term to be offered: On Demand
   e. Short Title: Rhetoric of Race
   f. Course Description:
      This course examines the relationship between communication, race, and ethnicity in public discourse. Students will study rhetorical constructions of race and ethnicity and the ways in which those constructions embody and respond to social relations and power.
   g. Prerequisites: There are no prerequisites for this course.
   h. Initial Term of Course Offering: Fall 2007

2. Objectives and Evaluation
   a. Objectives of the course: Students will
      1. Describe the complex relationship between communication, race and ethnicity.
      2. Identify general theories of race and ethnicity.
      3. Analyze the ways in which those persons who have not historically had the ability to “authorize” official texts “make do” or create raced and ethnic discourses.
      4. Evaluate critical perspectives on “texts” that implicate and are implicated by race and ethnicity.
   b. Sample Assessment. Student assessment will be comprised of the following:

4. Rationale
   a. This course allows students to gain specialized knowledge about discursive articulations of race and ethnicity.
   b. This course will require extensive reading of challenging material and demand that students apply theory to the analysis and critique of concrete discursive situations.
   c. This course does not duplicate existing courses within the university. There is one course that may appear to be similar to what this course proposes: SOC 2840. The difference between that course and this one is that SOC 2840 is focused explicitly on the “causes and consequences of prejudice and discrimination; the effects of majority and minority status for intergroup relations.” This proposed course differs in scope by addressing textual products and the theoretical dimensions of race and ethnicity, not the sociological relations between groups. This proposed course also differs in requiring students to analyze concrete discursive situations.
   d. This course will supplement the available course offerings for students in public communication and will be listed as an elective for African American Studies.
5. Implementation
   a. Faculty members to whom this course may be assigned: Angela Aguayo, Suzanne Enck-Wanzer, Norman Greer, Olaf Hoerschelmann, Shane Miller, or Mehdi Semati.
   b. There will be no additional costs to students.
