Private J. Delbert Wilson of Fort Bragg, North Carolina, is visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Wilson, and his wife at Newton. The division will shortly move to Dayton, Ohio, or Montana for training as parachute infantry, he believes. Delbert was given a short furlough after returning to duty from the hospital, following treatment for his shoulder. He was injured last winter when a "jeep" went over a cliff at Camp Claiborne, Louisiana, during night maneuvers, killing one man and injuring the other occupants. His shoulder was fractured. After returning to duty, it developed an abscess and he was sent to the hospital at Fort Bragg.

BLISS' POEM

Dear Mr. Bliss,
Somewhere in Alaska:
You sure know plenty
But we ain't goin' to ask ya.
Just read your poem
In the Newton Press
Who this is from,
I'll let you guess.
We know when its sunny
We know when it rains
So military secrets
Will secrets remain.
We know where you're going
We know where you'll land,
No need to inform us
If met by a band.
We know where you sailed from,
We don't need the date.
And mom will remember
The meals that you ate.
You don't need a diary,
And it ain't no sin.
You don't need the envelopes
Our letters came in.
You don't need a flashlight
To guide you at night
All you need to do
Is follow God's light.
When hiding away
And taking your smoke
The home folks are doing
Without their "Moch"
You know a lot, lad,
That you don't dare tell
So just keep the lid on
And give 'em hell.
There are friends like me
Back of you, knowing
That sooner or later
'Twill all make a showing.
If I dare to, Mr. Bliss
I'll sign this poem with a kiss.
For it's boys like you
And friends like me
That will keep this land
"The Land of the Free."
